

TEACHER RETIREMENT SURVEY 2021

Do you feel retirement ready?

Schools in England are facing a 'retirement rush' as their most senior and experienced teachers bring forward their retirement plans amid the pressures of the pandemic. Our recent survey highlights that many education professionals are lacking confidence that they are financially ready for retirement.

Simon Rake, head of the teachers division at Wesleyan Financial Services, said:

“Considering the stresses teachers have faced this past year it's not surprising that many are now reconsidering their retirement plans. But what is worrying is that so many are doing so despite not feeling ready financially to leave work.

Some teachers will find themselves between a rock and a hard place – deciding whether to risk retiring earlier without understanding how and when they can access the money they need, or continuing to work in conditions that may be taking a toll on their wellbeing and mental health.

Even if they're not considering early retirement, it is essential that teachers take the time to assess their own finances, understand what options they have available and put a plan in place so that they are in the strongest possible position when the day eventually comes.”

To arrange a meeting with one of our specialist Financial Consultants visit Wesleyan.co.uk/letstalkretirement

